North Berwick was a part of Kittery, known generally as the Kittery Commons till 1713. For more than a century it was a part of Berwick. In 1831, it received separate incorporation, its line of division following that of Lebanon due South to the headwaters of Frost Brook and following this brook to the South Berwick line. The earliest settlement occurred in the seventeenth century, but widespread occupation of the lands did not occur until after the Revolution.

Many of the early graves of North Berwick are marked only by fieldstones; many early graves are not marked at all. Only ten inscriptions have been found dating from the eighteenth century:

Humphrey Chadbourn,	176(?)
T. Pray	1775
Lydia Hall	1784
John R. Randall	1787
Molly Lang Clark	1789
Elizabeth Chadbourn	1792
John Chadbourn	1792
Humphrey Chadbourn	1793
William Hall	1797
N. Hanson	1797

After 1800 stones, many of them finely carved, with inscriptions became common. Very likely, by that time stone masons had moved into the area. A few of the stones cut by amateurs, notably those in the Rogers burial ground, show artistic talent that lacked only training.

The public cemeteries of North Berwick are relatively small. Burial on the farms was common. Most of the plots that have been moved were taken to Mount Pleasant or Hillside, but a few in the northern part of the town were moved to Sanford and some others to Lebanon. The ties to Berwick and South Berwick were strong, and those areas must be searched for records not found here.

A problem has been the naming of the roads. At least two roads were called the Old Sanford Road, while the designation Oak Woods Road may still mean either one of two today. In this manuscript the designation of the map of 1872 has been followed, while the alternate road, following a common usage with which all persons are not in agreement, has been called the Randall Road. Again, some persons have applied the name Turkey Street to the full stretch of one road; others refer to the northern part as the Estes Hill Road. The conflict over the naming of two roads was resolved many years ago by calling one the Beech Ridge Road, the other the Back Beech Ridge Road. Two parallel roads in the northern part of the town are still called the First Cross Road and the Second Cross Road. One of the most pleasant parts of this work has been tracing roads that have all but disappeared. The disused road that crosses Baumeg Bog is particularly attractive, much of it lined by stone walls, passing through a succession of beeches, birches, maples, oaks and firs.

Many persons have been helpful in locating obscure plots, but I wish to acknowledge especially the assistance of J. L. Hammond, Mark Gerrish, Edward M. Neal, Clyde B. and Clarence M. Staples, and, above all, Herbert Hall and his son, all of whom have accompanied me in searching for plots that disappeared when woods possessed the abandoned farms of a century ago. The help of Miss Emily C. Nixon in transcribing all of these cemeteries is gratefully acknowledged.
